My dear Mrs. Adams:

Mrs. John Reilly has just sent your letter to me to answer. At the present time it is really very hard to dispose of a collection of Chinese coins, as there are very few collectors of these and most collectors have pretty good collections. You might try the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston to see if they would be interested. The Ming note is worth in the neighborhood of $10.00, possibly a little more to a collector. There are probably about fifty of these in this country. The only other person I can think of who might buy the collection would be Mr. Wayte Raymond, 465 Park Avenue, New York City. He possibly would buy the Ming note and not the collection.

Very truly yours,

My dear Mr. Wood

Please accept my thanks & appreciation for the information regarding Chinese Coin Collection which you kindly wrote me. I am glad to know the worth of the Ming Bank Note. The Boston Museum of Fine Arts is not interested in coins & feel they have a fairly good representative collection of Oriental Art. It is not an easy matter to dispose of such at the present time I know.

Very sincerely yours
